.How Col. Amoss Works_

Global Private Eye Serves Thrills to His 1000 Clients

(The first in a series) By Edward T. Folliard Post Reporter

Col. Ulius L. Amoss, editor and director of field operations of what he terms a "private, world-wide intelligence service," broke off an exciting story about intrigue, shots in the dark, and the "escape" of Lavrenti Beria. He wanted to see about his mail.

Presently he was back behind his desk, at his home at Gibson Island, Md., holding up a gray envelope plastered with foreign stamps.

"This," he said, with a mysterious air, "is from a very great Russian expert."

Colonel Amoss (he holds that rank in the Air Force Reserve) has been described by an ecstatic reporter as "the world's leading private eye" and as one of "the greatest spies in history."

Government intelligence men have talked about him in less flattering terms, as Amoss himself wryly admits. A couple of recent published comments from unnamed Federal officials have it that Amoss is a "total loss" and that he was never known to be right.

Also, it is pointed out that Amoss may have caused

Some Schemes Cost More

Sometimes Colonel Amoss view. launches schemes that require more money than is available to him in the ISI treasury. Thus, last September he got $50,000 from millionaire Clendenin Ryan on what he said he made clear to Ryan was an "outrageous gamble" for the purpose, as he put it, of helping dissident Soviet big-shots escape from behind the Iron Curtain. So far none has been helped to escape, and he acknowledges as much.

Earlier Colonel Amoss got $7500 from a group of Maryland men, including former Gov. William Preston Lane, for the aforementioned scheme to get a Rus-

Colonel Amoss said he was waiting right now for "instructions" as to whether he should dash over to Europe to pick up some Soviet intelligence that would be turned over to him if Beria gives the word.

Now in New York

Those who subscribe to his ISI service get up-to-the minute word of what goes on in Moscow. For instance, Colonel Amoss informed his clients on September 14, 1953, that Andrei Vishinsky is doomed—marked for a purge. His report sug-gested that even Vishinsky might not know it, for he said:

"Vishinsky should quickly seek political asylum. A week, a month, six months may be too late."

Vishinsky is in New York, where he is serving as Russia's Permanent Representative to the United Nations.

"This is a STOP, LOOK and LISTEN letter," he tells subscribers. "Within months, the contents of this letter will be carried by the press wire services of the Nation.

Sometimes Colonel Amoss has hard luck in his timing.

For example, on last August 8 Premier Malenkov announced ment intelligence work.
